Mr. President,

I wanted to personally thank you for getting the One Big Beautiful Bill Act (OBBBA) across the finish line. It was a heavy lift, and it sent a clear message that your administration is serious about keeping America's economy strong.

I write today to raise an issue we have discussed in the past: the need to reverse the 90 percent limit on gaming loss deductions for US taxpayers included in the OBBBA.

I believe Congress should fix this issue as the policy is already creating problems. The current law makes it irrational to bet in the United States because you could end up owing taxes even when you lose or having a tax bill that exceeds your winnings for the year. Furthermore, this has the impact of setting back your signature policy No Tax on Tips which greatly benefits Nevadans because gamblers who win big, tip big, but now that this 90 percent limitation exists gamblers are likely to be less generous if they even gamble at all.

Beyond that, the change has knock-on effects for businesses like mine. The UFC supports a healthy, legal sports betting market to drive fan engagement, broadcast value, and sponsorships. When legal betting is discouraged, it hurts the ecosystem we've spent years building in partnership with state regulators and licensed operators. It also undercuts the transparency and integrity protections that legal betting provides for professional sports.

Fixing this deduction issue would send a strong signal that the United States supports common-sense regulation. You've always stood up for fighters, fans, and American businesses. This is another opportunity to do exactly that.

Respectfully,

Dana White
